Our Intent and Aims

At Applecroft we intend that our pupils will be taught to confidently demonstrate and use a fluent and legible, joined, handwriting style by the time they move to secondary school. We believe that all pupils should be encouraged to take pride in the presentation of their writing.

The aim of the handwriting policy is to outline clearly the purpose, nature, progression and management of the teaching of handwriting in our school. The policy aims to ensure a whole school approach to the teaching and learning of handwriting, and consistency in the presentation of work. The implementation of this policy is the responsibility of all teaching staff and includes the handwriting aspects of the National Curriculum.

The policy aims to teach children to write in a legible, fluent and cursive style which they have had the time to practice and develop for themselves, in order to cope with the writing demands of school and life.

The Purpose of the Handwriting Policy

General statement

Handwriting is a tool for communication in the written form. The purpose of teaching handwriting is to enable children to develop a legible, fast and fluent script, which can be adapted for different audiences. If children find the physical act of scribing taxing, they are unlikely to develop into confident effective writers.

Audience and Impact

Children will recognise and value the need for high-quality, attractive presentation and handwriting. They will also develop an understanding of distinct purposes, audiences and settings for handwriting. For example, high quality presentation is needed for display purposes and children should write in a more informal style for personal notes. Children need to identify and understand the purpose and audience for their handwriting.

Celebration

Our whole school 'Celebrating Handwriting' display is located in the corridor adjacent to the main hall and show-cases best examples of children's handwriting and presentation from Reception - Year 6. Classroom handwriting displays and books, celebrating the on-going progress of all pupils are up-dated each half-term.

Handwriting will be celebrated at the last achievement assembly in a half term with the award of a handwriting certificate to one member of each class. These will be 'Brilliant Handwriting' to recognise achievement or 'Trying hard with your handwriting' to recognise effort and progress.

Fluency and Speed

It is important that children learn to write quickly and naturally in order to cope with the demands of all areas of the curriculum. As children progress through the school, the growing emphasis on the skills of composition rather than transcription means that fast and fluent handwriting becomes essential. Fluent handwriting is writing where the pen flows from letter to letter across the page in a smooth, steady, continuous manner. Fluent writing is not normally produced in a slow painstaking manner: an easy rhythmic flow of movement should be developed. However, children should write at a pace that allows them to achieve legibility and regularity.

Self Esteem

All children need to value their work. A child's ability to write comfortably and legibly affects performance in many other areas of the curriculum and can have an effect on a child's self-esteem and motivation. Moreover, good presentational skills can motivate children to work more generally with thought and care. Children should therefore be taught to develop their cursive handwriting style and write with confidence and ease.

Purpose and Objectives of Applecroft's Cursive Handwriting Style

In order to raise attainment for all pupils, we have adopted a consistent approach to the teaching of handwriting to provide continuity across year groups and through the key stages. The cursive handwriting style we use is matched to Applecroft's previous cursive handwriting style and is now taught through Letter-join. (Appendix 1)

Children are taught to write clearly and legibly in a continuous cursive style. The style is neat, legible and fast. From Year 2 children are taught to form individual letters with the necessary leading and exit strokes. The main feature of cursive handwriting is that all letters begin on the line and have joining strokes. Children continue to read print and various fonts around them. The style allows children to more easily develop an automatic and natural cursive style. This releases the brain to concentrate on other ideas in the complex process of writing e.g. spelling, grammar, style, composition.

Teaching and Learning

Handwriting is a skill that needs to be directly taught, practised and observed to develop and consolidate learning over time. Naturally, the general policy on teaching and learning and best practice applies to this policy. In addition the following should be noted:

- The importance of the teacher's and LSA's role in competently demonstrating the formation of letters and patterns. All teachers and LSAs to use Letter-join cursive handwriting style in every situation with children i.e. in marking, in labelling, on whiteboards etc.
- The expectation that all handwriting sessions will include a direct teaching element to demonstrate letter formation and joins.
- Lessons will be taught with visual representations of the formation on the IWB as well as modelling by the class teacher.
- The expectation that children are observed while they are practising, to avoid the development of bad habits. Immediate feedback can be given and observations will inform assessment, objectives and planning.
- The expectation that children demonstrate the skills they have practised in handwriting sessions in all other areas of their work whenever possible.
- Best practice and assessment of individual needs should guide teachers' judgements about the appropriate balance between whole class and group teaching.
- Handwriting practice takes place regularly (At least twice a week)
- Additional whole class sessions may be added where assessment indicates this is required and additional practice for smaller identified groups may be used.

Posture and Grip

Sitting in an awkward position can make writing uncomfortable and ineffective. It can also hinder the development of fluency and speed. The following should therefore be taught, observed and regularly monitored.

- Ensure that children have a good pencil grip, which is relaxed but allows for efficient control. The pencil should be held between thumb and forefinger with the pencil resting on the third finger in a tripod grip. The pencil should be held a comfortable distance from the point. Too tight a grip will result in tenseness and unnecessary pressure on the paper.
- Tables should be large enough and chairs of suitable height to allow comfortable posture. Children should be positioned with space to write and need a direct view of the teacher/board. The paper should be tilted anticlockwise for right handed writers and clockwise for left handed writers. The other hand should be used to steady the paper and bear some body weight.

Children need to be taught to self-monitor these good habits by being conscious of them from the beginning of their learning to write. It is important that they are reminded of these good habits regularly.

Left-handed writers can face some difficulties and these need to be considered and accommodated to allow them to develop a comfortable fluent style.

- The arm is restricted by having to move across the body. Be aware that the natural right to left writing movement of a left hander can result in mirror writing.
- The hand can move over the top of words obscuring them from vision therefore the grip should be positioned comfortably away from the point.
- The joining strokes are made with a pushed rather than pulled movement so sharp or over fine writing implements need to be avoided.

These strategies will help:

- Make sure left-handed children sit on the left of right handed children.
- Paper should be tilted clockwise.
- Model (skywriting) specifically for left handed children.
- Look at a grip specifically for left-handed children.

The appendix contains the agreed lower case alphabet style, capital letters and letter families with a sequence of introduction (letter families). (Appendix 1 and 2)

EYFS

In the EYFS, children will be involved in activities to develop skills which will allow them to eventually acquire legible, fluent and fast cursive handwriting. The activities will develop fine and gross motor control.

Fine motor skills are developed through activities that require small-scale movements such as cutting, sewing, sticking and using drawing or painting tools. Lego, Mobilo and activities such as threading beads, using pegs, tracing and playdough modelling also contribute to the development of fine motor control. These activities prepare children and help them to acquire skills that they will need in handwriting.

Throughout the EYFS, children should have daily opportunities to form appropriate letter shapes. Children will usually be at an emergent handwriting stage in the early Foundation Stage. In Nursery, children will be taught to print formal letter shapes from their names individually. Children will also practise forming patterns requiring different strokes which will eventually help with continuous cursive writing. This will continue in Reception. In Reception children will learn to confidently produce correctly formed printed letters and about sizing letters. Towards the end of Reception letter formations are grouped into the Letter Join families.

In Year One children continue to form printed letters with the correct formation and sizing linking to their learning in Reception through the Little Wandle formation phrases.

SEND

Pupils with identified special educational needs and disabilities have a personalised approach with quality-first teaching methods, strategies and resources used to support the child depending on the particular barriers to their learning. Appropriate actions, targets and reasonable adjustments to move the child forward will be documented within the 'Individual Learning Plan' cycle and discussed with parents/carers. These may include additional resources, differentiated activities or adult support to enable the child to access the whole-class learning opportunities. In addition it may be appropriate to use a short time-bound intervention programme, delivered to a small group of children by a trained LSA. Examples of strategies, resources and adaptations for handwriting currently used in the school include:

- The use of writing slopes
- Adaptation of writing implements e.g. triangular pencil grips
- Use of chrome books for longer writing tasks
- Handwriting group as intervention - additional focussed practice

- Use of 'fill the blank', matching or other such activities which limit the need to write when this isn't the main purpose of the task.

Resources

Implements

Children begin writing with a thick triangular pencil and progress to using a thinner pencil, occasionally with a triangular grip. By the end of Year One the majority of children use a standard pencil. In Year Three, children are introduced to using a pen (as supplied in the school shop) and awarded their 'pen licence'. The majority of children should have achieved this by Year Four.

Paper and Line Guides

Handwriting books are used from Reception through to Year Six. The books progress from a wide line spacing through narrower lines and from Year Three onwards to a handwriting book with inter-spaced lines, to regulate proportion and consistency of size.

From Year Three, children are introduced to using a line guide with plain paper and a variety of guides are available to use according to purpose and individual need.

Other Resources

In the early stages of handwriting, large rhythmical movements and the development of fine motor skills are encouraged through the use of modelling materials, paints, sand trays and white boards. Gross motor activities are also planned for within the LetterJoin scheme.

As handwriting develops, use of chalks, paint, inks, special pens and brushes and calligraphy work can refine fine motor skills and presentational understanding. Taking a creative approach to handwriting, occasionally making explicit links with art, is a useful way of continuing to develop skills in a different context.

Fonts

Fonts to support the Letter-join cursive style are available to be downloaded onto computers. Where possible children should be seeing this style on printed documents around the classroom and in the wider school environment.
